Commission permanente du conseil d'agglomération sur le développement économique

PUBLIC REVIEW OF THE LIFE SCIENCES AND HEALTH TECHNOLOGY CLUSTER

Clusters are geographic concentrations of interconnected companies and institutions in a particular field. In the Greater Montréal area, the Life Sciences and Health Technology Cluster is a major engine of economic development encompassing some 620 organizations, namely 150 research centers and 80 foreign corporation subsidiaries, amounting to a workforce of 41,000.

Montréal InVivo has the mission to create a dynamic and mobilizing force whereby all parties can converge toward common objectives, so as to ensure the competitiveness and growth of the cluster in the Montréal metropolitan area. The organization coordinates structure-building initiatives, allowing parties to collectively overcome the challenges with which the sector is confronted. It serves as a privileged interlocutor to a range of audiences.

A strategic partner of the cluster, the Montréal agglomeration would like to use this opportunity to identify, in conjunction with Montréal InVivo, the spheres of cooperation and the support that could benefit this entire sector, and consequently, the city's economy as a whole.
